This local rate is greater, so we are informed, than the through charges formerly were on Topeka and Denver flour—the points from which the largest shipments were made, while the rates from Maricopa east remain unchanged. Of necessity this will give us the trade of the lower section of the Territory free from competition, excepting that which California producers may present. The effect will not only be to raise the price of our flour but to give a larger and more certain market. By this protection surplus wheat in the hands of our farmers, we hope, may be disposed of at fair prices.
